

Which countries are most affected?

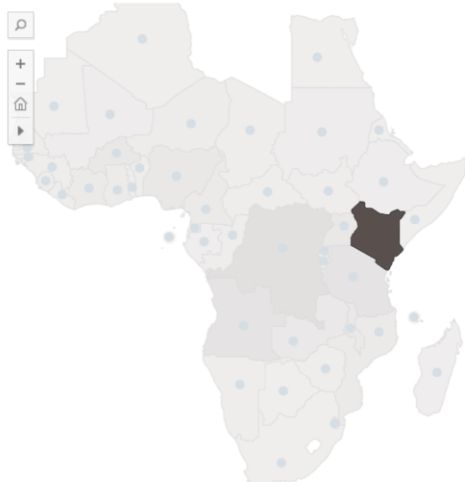

Darker shading marks a higher number of deaths caused

How have the number of malaria deaths changed over time in Angola?

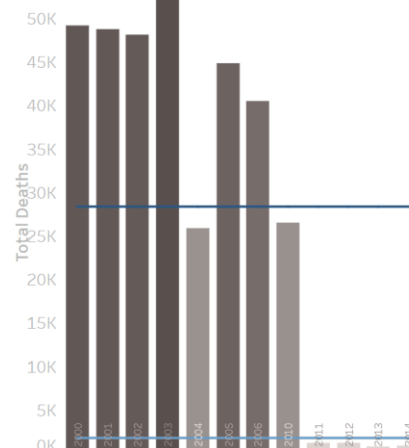

Angola's national average of Malaria related deaths is more than eight times the average of the African Continent. Angola experienced its' most significant spike in Malaria related deaths in 2003 nearly quadrupling the country's already above-average death rate.

Which countries are most affected?

Darker shading marks a higher number of deaths caused

How have the number of malaria deaths changed over time in Kenya?

Kenya has been the most effected by Malaria related deaths out of all African countries with a national average of nearly 28,000 deaths per year. The country with next highest average is the Democratic Republic of the Congo at 15,203. However, since 2011 Kenya has been able to significantly decrease the number of citizens who die from Malaria.

They are currently averaging below the continental average of 1,303, down from 26,017 the previous year.

To access these insights, click on the interactive map and the data will begin to show up on the right-hand side of the page. To see the individual years in more detail, one must click on the bar in the graph and click keep only. To get back to the yearly data click the back button in the bottom right hand corner of the graphic.